

For much of last year, several people in town have been talking about re-starting the Lyndeborough Garden Club. Now that the holidays are behind us, and we have about two months before spring, it seems like a good time to try to start.

I have reserved the meeting room at the Lyndeborough Library for Sunday, February 1st at 2:00 to hold a meeting for everyone interested in joining a garden club for Lyndeborough residents. I hope people will come to share their ideas about how to make it a successful group – what activities it should undertake, how it should be organized, and how we can share resources to make all our gardens more beautiful and productive.

I hope that if the club is successful it will help to increase the sense of community in our town as it was for centuries, when neighbors knew each other and did productive things together to help each other's homesteads and improve the town in general.

I plan to start a Facebook group for the garden club. But I know that many people in town do not use Facebook. (I wish I didn't have to.) If you know people who should be interested in joining, please contact them directly to share this notice and invite them to join.

Sincerely,

Bob Newton
